Captain of Schooner Tells How Vessel Was · Lost

SHIP ABANDONED NEAR ISLAND OF KAHOOLAWE

WITH MASTS CARRIED AWAY AND WATER POURING IN.

Captain Kalama and his crew of the Island schooner Kautkesouli came in on the steamer Likelike this morning, reporting the total loss of their vessel about fifteen miles southwest of the Island of Kahoolawe on Thursday of last week, September 27.

The vessel was dismasted and leaking badly when abandoned by the c.e.w., and is now floating around remewhere in the neighborhood of the place where she was wrecked, if she as not sunk.

The Kaulkeaouli sailed from Honoluiu September 25 for Koholalele, Ha-wall, with a cargo of 100 tons of fer-Blizer. Two days later, on Thursday, when about fifteen miles southwest of Kahoolawe, she encountered a heavy northerly swell. There was very little wind, not enough to steady the little in the trough of the sea, every roll racking her badly and threatening to tear the masts out of her. Finally the $80. a ton. mainmast breaking off about three feet from the deck, The vessel at this time was under her mainsail, jib and flying jib. the foresall being furl-ed. The rolling was too much for the fore port rigging, and within a few seconds of the breaking of the main mast it, too, carried away, the fore mast going overboard, breaking off bout a foot above the deck. The boat was immediately rescued from underneath the wrecked gear.

But the strain had strained the distile vessel badly, and she commenced to leak, though not to such an extent that the crow was not able to keep the schoone free from water by the use of the pumps.

The vessel, however, was totally disabled, her masts overboard and the water pouring in through the leaks in her bottom. She was drifting offshore and in a dangerous position. Reluctantly Captain Kalama gave orders to take to the boat and abandon the ships.
